Most of the railroad companies require their passenger conductors to give a guarantee bond for honest service, and this bond is now of more importance than at any former period, as, whenever a railroad company is notified by the guarantee company that it will no longer stand good for the passenger conductor's honesty, the company has an excuse for dismissing him and

The case of Dr. A. F. Huddleston against the Big Four Rallway Company has been on trial at New Castle for nearly two weeks, Judge Elliott and M. E. Forkner, of New Castle, representing the company. The case is a long and tedious one, involving the introduction of much expert evidence. The Doctor claims $25,000 damages on account of injuries received at Winchester about a year ago. He was in the telegraph office at that place when a passing engine left the track, demolished the office and injured several persons, one of whom has since obtained a verdict for $5,000. A meeting of the Western roads with the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific has been arranged for next Wednesday at Montreal. The meeting of Thursday in relation to the differences in regard emigrant traffic which have existed for some time between the Grand Trunk on the one side and the Western roads and the Canadian Pacific on the other went far toward paving the way for a settlement of the troubles, and it is expected that the meeting of next Wednesday will finally divide the emigrant traffic to North Pacific coast points in a manner that will be satisfactory to all concerned.

The Baltimore Journal of Commerce has just issued its forty-sixth annual edition, giving a review of the commercial, financial and shipping interests of that city. Several pages, with illustrations, are devoted to showing the facilities the Northern Central, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company's Baltimore line, offers shippers. The company's three elevators at that point have a storage capacity of three million bushels of grain, and tracks are laid on the piers where vessels unload shipments of ore direct on the cars. The company has immense sheds on these piers, where fruits and vegetables are unloaded for distribution to all points on their lines. There are also three freight houses, 55 feet wide by 330 feet in length, and from one of these houses a full trainload of oyesters is sent out every night. Side tracks and terminal facilities of all kinds are on the same extensive and well-arranged scale.

The Wabash company has just been called upon to pay damages on account of a person being injured, although not a passenger, by jumping off a train when i pany to instruct its agents that the law Indiana should be vigorously enforced. Notices have been posted at all their stations and yards publishing the State law, Section 2169, which reads as follows: "Whoever, not being a pasenger or employe, either climbs, jumps or steps, swings on or attaches himself to any locomotive, engine or car while the same is in motion or switching upon the track of any railroad of the State of Indiana, shall be fined in any sum not more than $3." There is not a day that this law is not disobeyed on the Union tracks, Indianapolis. From morning to night boys can be seen at street crossings jumping on and off of trains and the parents of the same boys would want es were they injured.

follow another who acknowledges that he must come to a violent death? Perhaps Jesus discerned or anticipated such reflections. At least, He answers the queries.

These men must share His fate. They must deny themselves, take up their cross and follow Him, and if they attempted as His disciples to save their lives, would lose them. This He had previously said.

(Matt. x, 38, 39.) So important was it that He repeated it (Luke xiv, 26, 27), more than once. (John xii, 25, 26.) He is putting the law of His kindgom, hard then to receive, doctrine (II Tim. iii, 12), and proclaimed in distant parts (I Cor. xv, 31), the law of self-sacrifice. That law was directly opposed then as it is now, to the popular conception of life, as a period of self-seeking and pleasure. (II Tim. iii, 4.)

PROFIT.—A measureless gulf yawned be-tween Jesus and His disciples when these last words were uttered. He had declared what to them was not only a mystery, but also a hopeless representation of the cause to which they had committed themselves. He destined to die by cruel hands-they destined to follow on and lay down their lives for His sake! And, to cap the climax of absurdity, this is de-their salvation! To bridge over the difficulty and regain His control of His folowers Jesus advances to the subject of personal profit. Suppose instead of what He pictured they could gain the world, what profit if they lose their souls (Acts xxi, 23-24). In this He endeavors to bring their minds from temporal to heavenly things, that they might make a choice

(Heb. xi, 25). To some extent He must thereby have conveyed to them a slight idea of His mission as Messiah and their relation to Him (Rev. ii, 10), as well as the KINGDOM.—There is good logic in all that Jesus had said up to this point. He, the Messiah, must suffer, die and rise again.

His followers must in like manner be sacrificed for Him. But they shall not lose their reward in His kingdom. We can put these three propositions together and find comfort beyond the power of speech. That little company to which they were first spoken must have had some confusion of ideas requiring further instruction. When will that kingdom be set up? The question may have been asked or it may only have struggled in burdened hearts that dared not utter their fears. How that question has distracted the church! How many words of Scripture have been distorted and man-gled to confirm preconceived opinions! How many in all centuries have stood a-tiptoe gazing and expecting! (Luke xvii, 20.) And CONCLUSION. - We have reached the heart of the Christian system. Jesus came to be the Messiah, the king. As prefiminary to the setting up of His kingdom He would lay down His life and take it again. (John x, 17). He would become victorious by first suffering defeat. He would invite men to Him in the same spirit and bid them triumph as He did, gaining their lives by sac-rifleing them. Of such, and such only (Rom. vill. 9), He would build up a kingdom, the beginning of which should be made in the lifetime of those about Him, a kingdom granted to its faithful subjects. Such a statement might seem to worldly wise men but the mad utterances of one bereft of reason. And yet the kingdom has come. The King is on His throne. He counts His people by hundreds of millions. They are loyal beyond most abject servants of the mightiest potentates of earth. That kingdom spreads. To Him "shall every tongue confess." (Phil. ii, 11).

ELUCIDATION AND REVIEW OF IN-TERNATIONAL LESSON, MARCH 1. Testament. (Acts xii, 29; I Pet. i, 11.)

Luke ix, 18-27-The Basic Principle of the Christian System.

By REV. JAMES E. GILBERT, D. D., Secretary of the American Society of Religious Education.

CONTEXT .- After raising Jairus's daughter. Jesus restored sight to the blind men The twelve apostles were sent out on their mission. Sood afterward intelligence was received of John's death in prison, the record of which has been anticipated. The feeding of the five thousand at Bethsaida and the walking on the sea followed. (Mark vi, 30-48.) Returning to Capernaum, Jesus discoursed on the bread of life. (John vi, 26-70.) The opposition of the scribes and pharisees having been awakened. He spoke on the subject of pollution. Making a journey to the northwest and thence easterly across the country, the deaf and dumb man, and many others. (Mark vii, 1-32.) In Gennesaret He fed five thousand and cured a blind man. (Matt. xv. 1-39.) Thence he withdrew His disciples into the region of Caesarea Philippi (Mark viii, 27), the most northern section visited by Him, seeking retirement for meditation and OPINION.-In that distant retreat Jesus engaged in prayer (Verse 18), according to His custom (Luke xi, 1), probably alone, (Luke xxil, 39-41.) While in the way (Mark ix, 27), He asked His disciples, "Whom say the people that I am?" This He must have known, but he desired an expression as occasion for instruction. Three answers were returned. He might be John the Baptist, or Elias, that is, Elijah, or one of the great prophets. These three opinions were all put forth from the court of Herod. (Ch. ix, 7.) That monarch, having learned of Christ's wonderful career, had called his courtiers to inquire, and they had stated these rumors which had gradually gone out among the masses. They were all based upon the doctrine of the transmigration of souls, a doc national faith was being corrupted.

trine which had been brought into Jewish thought from the East, through the influence of Alexander's campaigns. We see how the CONFESSION .- Having learned the popular opinion, Jesus sought that of the apostles. It is probable that He desired this at the beginning. Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (Matt. xvi, 16), which confession Luke abbreviates. The Christ signified the Messiah, one word Greek, the other Hebrew-the anointed, the expected King. This declaration had preusly been made by Andrew (John i, 41), by Nathaniel (John i, 49), by the woman and the people of Samaria (John iv, 29-42); and subsequently by Peter (John vi. 69), by Martha (John xi, 37), and by Jesus Himself (Matt. xxvi, 63). The statement here is valuable because it is set over against erroneous views. Why was Peter spokesman? Some say he had been appointed primate. as is evidenced by the order of the names of the apostles. (Matt. x, 2.) And some say that because of his strength of character the others instinctively turned to him as leader, that on this occasion they conferred together, gave their judgment, and let him express it. But what saith the Scriptures? That Peter spoke under the direct illumination of the spirit of God. (Matt. xvi, 17.) He was enabled as all men are to discern

Jesus (I Cor. xii, 3.)
SILENCE.—Luke omits the Savior's commendation of Peter's confession (Matt. xvi. 17-19), by which its value is greatly in-creased, but he does not overlook the fact, recorded in Matthew and Mark, that silence concerning it was enjoined. But why not tell what a man most needed to know? For three reasons. They were not prepared to tell. They were yet only pupils, learning the earlier truths of Christianity. He was not prepared to have the message delivered. Many experiences and events must make Him ready for His Messianic kingdom. The nation was not ready for the message. So gross were the ideas of the Christ and His mission that He would be greatly embarrassed if any considerable number of persons should believe Him the expected sovereign. Slowly let all advance together-Jesus, His apostles, the masses. Let the prophecies, His miracles, teachings and character be studied. The day will come when this great truth may be published (Acts ix, 12), the basis of the new system. PREDICTION.-The disciples having be come convinced that Jesus was the Messiah. it was next in order to correct their views concerning the nature of Christ. Thus far they had shared the false notions of the nation, regarding Him as a temporal prince (Acts i, 6), a notion which they were slow to abandon. But Jesus explains to them how He must suffer, be rejected, slain and raised again. He had not told this before.

He began now and referred to it afterward (Verse 44) on several occasions (Luke xviii, 31-33), even up to His crucifixion. (Lake xxiv, 7.) Notice, He says that He must suffer. It was necessary. Why? Because it had been predicted of Him by the earlier
